Just war theory is a doctrine, also referred to as a tradition, of military ethics studied by military leaders, theologians, ethicists and policy makers. The purpose of the doctrine is to ensure war is morally justifiable through a series of criteria, all of which must be met for a war to be considered just. The criteria are split into two groups: "right to go to war" and "right conduct in war". The first concerns the morality of going to war, and the second the moral conduct within war. conditions; also, the notion that the use of such force (jus in bello) should be limited in certain ways. Just war is a Western concept and should be distinguished from the Islamic concept of jihad (Arabic: “striving”), or holy war, which in Muslim legal theory is the only type of just war. Just war | international law | Britannica Just War Doctrine. Just War is a concept that governs the conditions under which a war can be waged and how it can be waged. Increasingly, it also handles the post-war issues of legal claims about war crimes committed previously. The theory of Just War is known in variant forms since antiquity and several versions exist within both religious and philosophical contexts. List of books and articles about Just War Doctrine

... NEW DIRECTIONS IN JUST-WAR THEORY As conventionally taught, contemporary just-war theory seeks to ensure the political independence and territorial sovereignty of nation-states by insisting that the only just wars are those waged in defense of either one's own state or a third party that has been subjected to attack from without. New Directions in Just-War Theory Cicero also believes that in a just war soldiers must have consideration for those who lay down their arms and show them mercy. "Not only must we show consideration for those whom we have conquered by force of arms but we must also ensure protection to those who lay down their arms and throw themselves upon the mercy of our generals, even though
