focuses on relationships being more crucial to personality development than are individual drives and abilities (see Greenberg and Mitchell 1983). Here, the important identity-preceding structure is the self, a personality structure formed out of interpersonal interactions. Object Relations

Theory - an overview |

ScienceDirect Topics Object relations theory is an offshoot of psychoanalytic theory that emphasizes interpersonal relations, primarily in the family and especially between mother and child. "Object" actually means person (Martin Buber, where are you now that we need you?), and especially the significant person that is the object or target of another's feelings or intentions. Object Relations Theory - Sonoma State University Object relations theory differs from Freudian theory in three important ways: (1) it places more emphasis on interpersonal relationships, (2) it stresses the infant's relationship with the mother rather than the father, and (3) it suggests that people are motivated primarily for human contact rather than for sexual pleasure.
